Not illustrated. 1872 Excerpt: . ground with linseed oil forms the White Lead of commerce. When it is subjected to the above treatment, the oil is first burned off, and then at a certain decree of heat, the oxygen and carbonic acid are set free, leaving only the metaHic lead from which it was manufactured. If, however, there be present in the sample any of the above mentioned adulterations, they cannot of course be reduced to metallic lead, and cannot be reduced by auy hrat of the blow.pipe flame to their own metallic bases; and being intimately incorporated and ground with the carbonate of lead, they prevent it from being reduced. It is well after blowing upon the sample, say half a minute, by which time the oil will be burned off, to loosen the sample from the charcoal, with a knife blade or spatula, in order that tho flame may pass uuder as well as over and against it. With proper care the lead will run into one button, instead of scattering over the charcoal, and this is the reason why the cavity above mentioned is necessary. A common star candle or a lard oil lamp furnishes the best flame for use of the blow.pipe; a coal oil lamp should not be used. By the above test, after a little practice, so small an adulteration as one or two per cent, can be detected; it is, however, only a test of ihe purity or impurity of a lead, and...
