Excerpt: .Scotland an incident of the ownership of land. But since an owner can lease that right as a separate estate to third parties, and obtain a rent for it, it would seem that arbiters would be justified in making allowance for such a claim, and it is believed that they have done so in several cases. Shootings are liable to rates, and are a separate part of an estate; so that if parties are deprived of this, or have the right injured, there does not seem any good ground for denying compensation. 8. Uivnnnonovivn RAILWAY-5 .--Tlle special circumstances attending the construction of underground railways have led to special provisions being inserted in the private Acts with regard to compensation, which may limit or extend the right under ordinary circumstances, and the right may even be admitted to compensation for structural injury to future owners or occupiers. 9. GOODWILL, TRADE PROFITS, ETC.--This question has been already fully dealt with in a previous part of this work, to which reference is here made. In certain circumstances, already ex See Penny v.
