Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Delivered at a Republican Mass Meeting at Sacramento: On Friday Evening, September 7th, 1860 But let this meeting, so considerable in numbers and so enthusiastic in spirit, called at such a brief and imperfect notice, having the single attraction of such a plain talk as your humble servant can afford, on matters political, be recorded in unimpeachable evidence of the growing favor of our cause and the definite prosperity of our party. And I rejoice exceedingly in this certain indication of our numerically increasing force. I rejoice for the sake of our cause and for the sake of the people. It is a most comfortable reflection, that after years of service in a political organization, after undergoing much of positive toil and loss, and struggling with vexation of spirit under the cloud of popular reproach, we are enabled to feel the power of the general voice in our behalf. I am glad of this, since I know that there are many among the floating classes of our population who cannot recognize and appreciate and who will not practically acknowledge the truth of our principles unless they are inscribed upon banners borne by an army having the prestige and promise of victory. And, fellow-citizens, that promise is now with us; and we may hope for and expect daily valuable accessions to our ranks. And be our proclamation - Let the recruits come in! on the one hand, unawed by threats of political proscription, and, on the other hand, welcomed by the most unaffected and sincere expressions of a desire for future political fellowship. Let there be no article illegitimately interpolated in our national creed which shall...
